Dancing Days

Sunlight filtered through leaves, breeze the melody they danced to. Serene and in tune, it didn't clash with the symphony that sounded from the estate.

Work paid off, the masters of the craft took their break. Fresh air and sun beckoned, carried them out and across the lawn, each listening in turn.

Jimmy and Robert danced, neither leading. They watched each other for cues. Taking inspiration and making it work, looking as though they were a duo.

Bonzo persuaded John to join. Their waltz hardly suited the music but together they found a beat, unconventional but distinct.

On they danced.
